The Neyde Azevedo Award for Brazilian Anthropology

The Neyde Azevedo Award is intended to support IU Anthropology graduate and undergraduate students doing research in/on Brazil. In particular, the award will support Anthropology students presenting papers at professional conferences and/or to participate in relevant academic meetings related to research in Brazil.

Eligibility: IU Anthropology Graduate students and Undergraduate majors doing research in Brazil

Application: A letter, up to one page, describing the intended activity and how the requested funds would support it. Please justify the specific amount you are requesting, up to $250. Please include specific dates, if applicable, and note if you will be applying for other sources of funding or for matching funds. Applications may be emailed to sodaffer@iu.edu, and will be evaluated on a rolling basis. Allow up to one month for your application to be reviewed.

Obligations: Upon return, the awardee is requested to write a small summary of the activity for publication in the departmental newsletter Process.

About the Donor: IU alumna Neyde Marques de Azevedo [1932–2008] came to the USA from Sao Paulo, Brazil, in 1954, with a scholarship from the Church of Latter Day Saints which supported her studies at Ricks College. She later earned an MA in Anthropology from Indiana University, and went on to pursue a successful career teaching music and anthropology at City College of San Francisco. She served on the City and County Immigrant Rights Commission and in various arts organizations in that city.
